J. F. Brown Returns From Washington Dissatisfied.

J. F. Brown, Agent of Public Lands, has returned from Washington and has once more resumed his desk in the land office. Speaking of his trip to Washington, he said: "I went there to lay information before Congress concerning the lands here. I had hoped that some steps would be taken to investigate our land system, but the appropriation for the investigation failed to pass and the situation is unchanged. 'I also made an effort to have the forestry department send an expert here to look into our forests and suggest methods for their improvement, but could do nothing more than secure a partial promise that at some future time a man would come.'"

Brown spoke highly of Wilcox and his work in Washington and criticized Gear. Mr. Brown thought that at first he would be compelled to remain in Washington, but when the land bill failed to pass he returned to this city at once.
